Our Work

Our Mission

The Chubb Rule of Law Fund's purpose is to advance the rule of law worldwide by supporting projects that build and strengthen legal institutions

The rule of law is a set of principles meant to ensure that governments operate in accordance with laws and that the origination and application of laws is fair and just. These principles include: equal enforcement and impartial adjudication of laws; equal access to justice and full government accountability; and protection of fundamental rights. Adherence to the rule of law is an essential element of civil society, establishing conditions that further the well-being of citizens and the free flow of commerce, creating the foundation for long-term investment and growth.

Chubb is committed to the advancement and preservation of this conception of the rule of law. Through the Fund, Chubb supports organizations and activities that promote conditions conducive to the rule of law, including the development of rules-based legal systems, with an independent and knowledgeable judiciary, capable of facilitating modern economic activity; the elimination of systemic public and private corruption; the restoration or preservation of safety and security in daily life, free from arbitrary violence or widespread civil disorder; the free flow of information and transparency in the administration of laws and regulations; and meaningful access to, and adequate representation in, civil and criminal proceedings.

“Thanks to increased funding from our Chubb Charitable Foundation and our external law firm partners, we have been able to sponsor additional projects that are significantly larger in scope and breadth than those we supported in the past, including increased support for projects that combat racial inequity in the U.S. justice system.”

Rule of Law Fund History - How We Got Here

Since 2008, the award-winning Chubb Rule of Law Fund has made grants to support organizations and activities that promote the preservation and advancement of the rule of law, including the development of rules-based legal systems, independent and knowledgeable judiciaries, anti-corruption, improved administrative procedures and access to legal services. The Fund has made more than $2.7 million in grants to organizations in every region of the world in which Chubb does business.

In its first decade, the Fund was recognized by the United Nations Global Compact, the largest corporate sustainability project in the world, as a model for other global companies in its Business for the Rule of Law Framework.

The Fund, which began as a program for Chubb's Legal and Compliance Group, is now a global corporate commitment, reflecting the importance of the rule of law to our company, our employees, our customers and our communities.

A Focus on Racial Justice: 2021 Projects

Racial Justice

In the last two years, the Fund has made seven grants, including four announced in 2021 that total $1.1 million, on initiatives to improve police and community relations, and to understand and reduce racial inequities throughout the criminal justice process. Here are examples from the portfolio of racial justice projects.

Improving trust and fairness in community policing.

Equal Justice USA's "Trauma to Trust" program is an innovative program that brings police officers and community residents together to increase empathy, understanding, trust and accountability. With support from the Fund, Equal Justice USA is expanding this program from Newark, N.J. to other U.S. cities. Over multiple sessions, police and community members work with a trained facilitator to learn how historical and personal trauma affects their interactions and perceptions of one another, building trust and fairness in community policing. After conducting virtual training due to the pandemic, the organization restarted in-person, full-length training in September 2021, with 70 participants participating in the program.

Promoting public safety through transparency, equity and democratic engagement. The Policing Project at NYU Law School was awarded grants for two projects to reform policing practices. In Chicago, the grant will support expansion of successful community policing practices that enhance accountability, problem solving and increased positive contact between police officers and neighborhood residents. Funds from the grant will help to develop the program as a model for other cities. The Fund is also supporting the organization's First Response project, which is in the process of developing state-of-the-art protocols for responding to emergency 911 calls to reduce the likelihood of inadvertent, unnecessary or disproportionate use of force.

Addressing racial disparities in the criminal justice system. The Pennsylvania Innocence Project was awarded a grant to support its efforts to amend state law to increase integrity in the criminal justice system by providing for greater transparency of police misconduct, access to records of police investigations, including exculpatory evidence, and an open registry of the use of jailhouse informants and recorded interrogations. In addition, the Vera Institute of Justice was awarded a grant to support Motion for Justice, a program that works with prosecutors to reduce racial inequities throughout the criminal justice process. The Institute is working with prosecutors in counties in seven states, and funding from Chubb will be used to expand the program to reach an additional 10 prosecutors across the country. Initial progress includes the implementation of policies in police departments that deter officers from engaging in non-public safety stops that disproportionately impact people of color.

Collecting and analyzing data to inform criminal justice advocacy. The Southern Center for Human Rights received a grant from the Fund to launch a multi-year campaign to collect and synthesize data to develop a model highlighting the impact of race in the administration of criminal justice. The organization's ultimate goal is to integrate these findings into its racial justice litigation and advocate for policy reforms to address the injustices made evident by this research.

Global Initiatives

Outside the United States, the Chubb Rule of Law Fund's recent projects address a broad spectrum of crucial challenges to the rule of law around the world. Examples include:

Building an international refugee legal regime for the 21st Century. The international legal regime for refugee protection, constructed decades ago and long before the ongoing migration crisis brought on by 21st century globalization, requires substantial reform. The Chubb Rule of Law Fund is supporting the Cyrus R. Vance Center for International Justice, which is working with a range of refugee advocates, academics and law firm partners to develop a refugee law reform agenda to ensure that refugee policies and laws are consistent with the rule of law. Reports of refugee abuse, exacerbated by pandemic responses, underscore the urgency of this work.

Judicial training in Guatemala. Chubb joined with other multinational companies and law firms to provide important training for judges in Guatemala to help promote greater independence and integrity in the judicial process. The Fund, along with the Cyrus R. Vance Center, collaborated with the Association of Judges for Integrity to provide judges with training on international financial transactions, guidelines on ethical obligations of the judicial office and other tools for how to combat abuse.

Enhancing the role of women in the Mexican judiciary. The Cyrus R. Vance Center, with support from the Fund, worked with the Mexican Association of Women Judges and Magistrates to train women judges on the regulation of the judiciary and judicial conduct in the United States and other Latin American jurisdictions in general and, in particular, on gender equality and non-harassment and non-discrimination.

In addition, the Cyrus R. Vance Center undertook four projects in 2020 with funding from the Chubb Rule of Law Fund. Chubb attorneys participated directly in three of these projects. This work had an important impact on the rule of law in East and West Africa, Mexico and Latin America

“Preserving and strengthening the rule of law is essential to ensuring that individuals and businesses prosper and thrive everywhere. Through the Chubb Rule of Law Fund, we are not only supporting organizations focused on building and strengthening legal institutions. Chubb employees around the world also participate by volunteering their expertise and time to identify and select new projects. Chubb lawyers and subject-matter experts can also contribute their specific knowledge and skills to shape projects.”
